

Transcript of Nigel Hepper Audio Clip

I was ten and a half years so I had a very clear memory of it and of course – I was sixteen when it finished, more or less and it was a very formative time in my life. We were conscious of changes and Leeds became very run down. It was a dirty city, industrial, of course they had no people to clean it and keep things going but that's the way it was because we had depended on coal and coal gives very dirty atmosphere and the factories were belting out smoke and so everything was extremely dirty and very different from the country life that we led.