I think I was too young. It was — it was exciting. Looking back I was too young to be nervous. I suppose I was more excited cos things were going — this was something that was unreal sort of thing and the following day when you'd hear the siren going say, you know, I'd go down the dug-outs and you'd hear the all clear. And then the following day go out probably and meet my mates in the — in school and there was no traffic as there was today so you'd play in the streets and you'd play in the roads, you know.
